A:ywalh Family Home

Seabird Island Health is pleased to announce the opening of the new 4-unit A:yxalh Family Home. The renovation/construction of the Family Home was made possible with funds from Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Stqo:ya Construction worked hard to meet our very tight deadline – we had from November to March to get all the work done and had winter conditions to challenge us.

The project had our community's attention and curiosity for all that time. The transformation is from an old home to a pleasant looking, appealing 4-unit housing complex for families at risk. The family applicants, once selected, will be given a temporary residence with access to cultural support and services.

Each unit is furnished with all appliances, furniture and household goods. The kitchens are equipped with: coffee maker, dishes, pots and pans, cooking utensils, toaster, towels, etc.

The home is a partnership between Seabird and the Ministry of Children and Family Development with the intention being to provide a place for families to heal, grow and learn to come together as thriving and strong family units. They will have ready access to support and services, including life skills coaching and a staff member living in one of the units to provide after hours support where needed. A:yxalh offers each family housing for up to one year with support from an on-site worker to help with life skills, family action plans, access to services, admissions/exits processes and communication with SIB and MCFD. Additional support includes parenting, cooking, shopping and budgeting skills.

Premier John Horgan visits Seabird, May 16

Seabird Island Band was happy to have our own Premier Horgan drop in for a visit. We were also very happy to welcome a few constituents from other leadership parties; Liberal Andrew Wilconsin, Chilliwack-Kent Maurie Throness, Green Party Sonia Furstenau, Chilliwack John Martin, Green Party Saanich North Adam Olsen, Skeena Liberals Ellis Ross. Seabird staff included; Chief Clem Seymour, CAO Daryl McNeil, Marie Vander Heiden, Gerald Basten, Art Andrew and Donna Andrew.

The sun was shining and the water levels were high. This visit provided those who were in attendance with a certain visual as to the flood risks for Seabird and the surrounding municipalities. For the future, it is the hope that much of what was witnessed during the Premier's visit will be a constant reminder of Fraser River priorities, effects of climate change and the communities who are affected by the seasonal freshet.

Lands & Government Affairs Communications/Design team learn from famous designers!

May 28 - 30 Sandy, Kristy and Zorana went to the "DesignThinkers" Conference in Vancouver. We registered as a "Thinktank" were featured in the program, which provided us with a shout-out and additional benefits.

We attended the networking / training sessions in the mornings. Each of us pre-registered for different topics. On day 1, the "Design for Cities and Communities" table gave me the opportunity to network and get tips from designers in the same line of work. I met Tara Kerner, a Designer for the Province of BC. We all shared what we do, difficulties we face and provided each other with tips on how to overcome them.

On day 2, I found the "Issues in Design Management" table rewarding. The President of the RGD and Design Manager for Empire Life, Wendy Millard headed up our table. Grace Partidge, the Art Director for "Article", recommended a book to me, I have since ordered. They mentioned using a Design Project Management Tracking software that could save us time allowing us to focus more time on workloads. They suggested a few of the better ones. Another member at the table was wasting time designing the same thing for different mediums. To save time and money, they recommend to use an on-line digital program where instead of designing for many formats it takes the one design and converts it to fit across all. This was very interesting as we design the same ad for: the TV's, Facebook and website each requiring different sizing. As a result we are constantly redesigning the same ad 4 different ways. This could save a lot of time that we could dedicate to other jobs.

Kristy attended the "Design as a Craft" table that made her look at graphic design from a different point a view.

"Its not not art, its business" Krys Blackwood, NASA

The "Advice for Emerging Designers" table Kristy attended, was about selling yourself in your work by using your own technique and not to be swayed by clients.

Zorana attended the "Building your Design Practice" table. Set yourself goals to have things done in a realistic time period. It included steps to take to start a small business.

"It takes 1 man to start a business, but a team to keep it going." Unknown

We were able to meet, learn from and be inspired by many famous designers:

Meg Lewis, founder of Ghostly Ferns and darngood.com spoke on being the full time you. Affirming who you are in your work, staying positive and you will receive positivity in return. "Work / Develop / Share: don't forget to share, you are not done until you have shared"

Pia Betton, spoke on Designers use of Design Thinking. How important it is to get out of the space (head, job) from time to time to find a solution.

Randy Hunt, the head of design for Artsy spoke on the Total Design Experience. "A total design is: coherent, has defined edges, is distinct, persists, is authentic and responsible."

"Design is the core of the organization. Design is integral to the organization." Stephen Gates, invision Stephen Gates was inspiring talking about building and managing an empowered creative team. The head of Design Transformation at "invision". He said "The problem is we treat design like it is art. But it needs to answer for more." We need to define the value the creative team brings to the organization or clients.

Krys Blackwood, the Senior Lead User Experience Designer at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory spoke on how she became a designer for NASA.

Samantha Warren, the Experience Design Manager at Adobe spoke on her work at Adobe. I enjoyed this talk immensely, as I had taken a Style Tiles workshop from her about 5 years ago.

Judy Snaydon, Design Instructor at Capilano University spoke on Speaking the Truth on Reconciliation. Her class did a design project around the First Nation Truths. In reviewing the Design Thinkers program, she noticed that Seabird Island was featured as a ThinkTank and did a shout out to Seabird asking where we were in the audience. We proudly shouted back! This brought a lot of attention to us. At the closing of the event, we had several people approach us wanting to connect with us later, hire us for events and partner up with us.

Josh Higgins was the final speaker of the event. Josh is the Executive Creative Director at Facebook and was the Design Director for President Obama.

Josh started as a musician and when that dried up, his friends asked him why he doesn't go into design. He said like what, I'm not artistic. They told him his band posters were graphic design. He stated those were just fun – you mean people make a career doing that.

> "Art inspires community. Design builds community." Josh Higgins, Facebook

Josh went back to school for design and was working in the garage at home, having fun with design. When he got an email from the Obama campaign asking him to design for the campaign, he thought it was a hoax and checked it out; turns out it was real. Then the roller-coaster ride began as he led the design team for the campaign.

We came away inspired, with excellent resources and with new colleagues we can work with.

There were many more speakers, I only highlighted the ones that I found most beneficial and inspiring to me. We look forward to attending again next year and continue learning more from our colleagues.

Baby Welcoming Celebration

The Annual Spring Baby Welcoming Celebration was a success. The Seabird Island Maternal Child Health Team worked in collaboration with the Health Department and Early Childhood Education team to make this day a special memory for our families. We share a passion for working with mothers, fathers and the infants and children of our next generation. As we welcomed the new babies into this world through a traditional blessing we also wanted to recognize the families, highlight their accomplishments and honor the mothers and fathers in our local communities in togetherness. Our goal was to create a precious memory and foster the families blanket of support by highlighting the importance of culture and displaying the support team of people willing to help make dreams a success through education and tradition.

The babies invited to the celebration were born from May 2017 to May 2018. This year we had fifty-two babies from our seven communities that actively accessed services through Seabird Island's Maternal Child Health Team. Out of the fifty-two invited, twenty-eight attended and were celebrated through blessing of two respected Elders from our community. Nineteen of the fifty-two babies were from Seabird Island Band alone. One of which was a planned home-birth, where this family was passionate about bringing indigenous birthing practices back into community with the help of our local Registered Midwife and community Indigenous Doula. The families in attendance had delightful support from their family as well as the staff from the Seabird Band Office to total approximately one-hundred and twenty people in witness of this celebration.

At this years community celebration it was a beautiful site to see the families honored and blanketed with personalized blankets that many of the mother's worked on at Women's Group to add that unique and personal touch. Not only were the blankets special, but the families were drummed into the Band Gym by the singers and drummers from Seabird Island Community School alongside their mentors. It was a truly heart warming sight to have children from Kindergarten to our Graduates of 2018 drum in the new babies and future generation, it is a mirror of the importance of culture and the cycle of life as the seasons change.

It was and continues to be an honour for the Maternal Child Health Team to host this event. It is our passion to work with families in a positive, supportive and culturally safe way. We are fortunate as a community to continue to do this with tremendous support of our Registered Midwife Amelia Doran. Amelia currently works as a solo practitioner and never fails to make our families feel comfortable, supported and fosters the experience of pregnancy, birth and beyond. Amelia has a humbleness about her practice that allows families to be themselves in support of collaboration of care with many teams in the health field. This past year Amelia delivered over 70% of the babies from our communities!

We want to thank all the families who have touched our lives and allowed us to continue our work of passion. We hope to continue to be an accessible support to families in a encouraging, reliable and culturally safe way. That being said, our hands also go up to the team of people that made this event possible and a treasured memory at that!

Thank you, Seabird Island Maternal Child Health Team.

Brooke Bobb-Reid, Maternal Child Health Kwiyo:s, Indigenous Birth Doula

Education 2018 Graduates

Thomas Andrew

Agassiz Elementary Secondary Graduate 2018

Thomas has lived at Seabird Island his entire life and has attended schools in Agassiz since Grade 1.

His challenge in school was catching up on work all the time. His best memory was going on the Amazing Race field trip.

Thomas is going to work after graduation, until he finds out what he is interested in taking for Post-Secondary education.

His advice and encouragement to other students is to "Keep up with your work".

Education Grade 1 Salmon Release Ceremony

The grade ones took delivery of 55 eyed Coho eggs on February 5, 2018. This was the beginning of our daily observations of the salmon life cycle. The students were amazed, as they soon could see small fish forming inside the transparent eggs. The students were excited to see the eggs had hatch on March 12 into Alevin. After spring break we came back to find our Alevin turned into small fry (baby salmon). The children helped with daily feeding of the fry during which time they made observations about the growth and development of the salmon. One of the most significant observations was that three of the eggs hatched into double headed fish. These Siamese fish did not survive. On May 7 we held our Salmon Release Ceremony. The grade ones along with k-3, some intermediate students and some high school students released 52 Coho salmon into the Maria Slough, with the help of the school student drummers and singers singing the salmon song.

Cooperative Education/Mentorship

Hasanah James began her Photojournalism mentorship on May 22, 2018 with Mr. Greg Laychak. Greg is a professional, freelance photojournalist who has offered his time at no charge to mentor Hasanah. Greg will be working with Hasanah within the confines of the Seabird Island community. This will branch out over time as Hasanah's skills improve.

Special photography equipment has been purchased for Hasanah to use for the duration of the mentorship. She will have access to this equipment all day, every day. This will allow her to take photos when a subject inspires her. This will also allow her to build her portfolio.

We have loaded Olympus software on a computer in the Seabird Community School computer lab. She will have access to this software to edit her work. She will also be loading this software on a computer at home so she can edit her work over the summer.

Greg has made arrangements with Nina Grossman, who works at the Agassiz Harrison Observer, to review and publish some of Hasanah's work. Keep an eye out for her work in the Observer.

Hope in the Darkness — at Soowahlie First Nation.

May 27 at 6:51am · Chilliwack ·

Day 12 (May 26), West Coast: Today was an early start on the walk, beginning at 5:30AM from Scowlitz First Nation area heading down Hwy 7 to the Seabird Island Band's 49th annual First Nations festival. 13 km later I arrived just before 8AM. My brother went ahead and thanks to the generosity of Seabird Island and Angie, we set up a booth at the registration area. It is a festival involving over 50 soccer teams that come from all over BC and canoe racing which was canceled due to high water. I was very fortunate to have met Chief Clem Seymour who also had a walking stick made by a close friend depicting a story of its own. Chief Seymour is a very knowledgeable elder who shared some of his wisdom and history of his stick. We also met the MC Kevin and community drummers who performed some great songs. Then there was a young lady, 13 year old Kaitlan Atleo who is an upcoming soccer star. She signed my walking stick. To top it off we met a teacher from the Soowahlie First Nation who invited us to stay in her community at the campground in her motor home! This was a very welcomed gesture after spending a few nights in our vehicle with no shower.

This festival is not only about sport but a lot of cultural sharing which we were part of. We left the festival to continue our journey into Chilliwack arriving just before 6 pm. Then we met Laura-Lee, the teacher who escorted us to the campsite. As we made our way through the First Nations territories of Skowkale First Nation, Yakweakwioose Reserve, Tzeachten First Nation Band then into Soowahlie First Nation. When we arrived, we spoke with band council member Tanya Commodore who is a big part of the community. They just lost a very talented 23 year old Talitha. I have attached a piece of this talented young artist's work, as I looked at it I thought of the huge loss for her family, the community and all of us. The art of this rising star was beautiful. Her legacy will not be forgotten. I can't help but think of so many young people we have all lost that also had great talents we will never realize. This is the purpose of Hope In the Darkness, to open dialogue and let our young people know they can count on us to be there in their darkest moments. What seems to be a constant on our journey is that I have met so many strong women that are leaders in their communities and families. They want their community members and young ones to come to them when they are in need. They are so inspiring. Here in the mainland, the impact the residential schools have had on our people has been devastating. It is a long term journey.

My last thought is I encourage everyone to go to our main site at www.hopeinthedarkness.ca and look at our routes in the east and west and contact us to attend your school, communities or office. Come and walk with us! We would welcome the opportunity to share our purpose and how we feel we may help in opening dialogue with our young people.

B.C. school holds traditional naming ceremonies for Stó:lō youth

Seabird Island Community School helps connect students to their heritage through Indigenous names

Ryan Patrick Jones and Kallan Lyons · for CBC News · Posted: May 19, 2018

Jayden Bobb-Jollimore, centre, received the name Kükpi at a traditional naming ceremony held at Seabird Island Community School this spring. It was the name of his uncle, Sonny, who died two years ago. (Ryan Patrick Jones)

The More than Words series about B.C. Indigenous languages is produced in partnership with the Reporting in Indigenous Communities course at UBC's Graduate School of Journalism.

Jayden Bobb-Jollimore walks counter-clockwise around a circle formed by his fellow students, teachers, and family. The 17-year-old at Seabird Island Community School is heading toward a row of blankets elders have laid on the floor of the gym.

When he arrives, he stands on the blankets and turns toward the crowd, facing east.

He has taken his last steps as Jayden."Kükpi! Kükpi! Kükpi!" the crowd calls. Jayden now carries a new name, a Nlaka'pamux name, as Jayden's mother's side is of Nlaka'pamux descent. It's that of his late Uncle Sonny, who taught him how to hunt, fish and provide for his family. It translates to "chief."

Bobb-Jollimore is one of 15 students who received an Indigenous name at a traditional Stó:lō naming ceremony held at the school on April 18.

The school is in an Indigenous community near Chilliwack, B.C., and it mostly serves Indigenous children. The naming ceremony is part of its effort to provide students with a Stó:lō-centric education and to reintroduce traditional cultural practices that were lost due to the ongoing legacy of colonialism.

"We wanted to start it because no one was getting any names handed down at that time," said Stó:lō elder Kwosel, who goes by her Halq'eméylem name.

"We wanted to revive it."

Kwosel was a member of the cultural committee that organized the school's first naming ceremony in 2000. Since then, more than 200 students have received a traditional name at the school.

To reward and encourage

The ceremony connects students to their heritage and rewards performance, said Dianna Kay. She is the language program co-ordinator at the school who organizes the annual ceremony. "How we select students is they need to be culturally aware and have demonstrated good citizenship within the school and the environment, meaning not only here but in the outside world," said Kay.

Bobb-Jollimore was chosen to participate as much for his role at home as for his behaviour at school, said Kay. Since his uncle died two years ago, he's taken on the responsibility of caring for his grandfather, Wayne Bobb, a former chief of the Seabird Island band. He's also shown more interest in Stó:lō culture and has become an avid hunter and fisherman.

"Before I wasn't as much involved in my culture. I hadn't found it yet," he said.

"And then I started to open up my eyes and really listen and I found it. I would say I'm getting more involved."

The school hopes receiving a traditional name will encourage students to succeed.

Makayla Sam-Greene received the name Semiat at Seabird Island Community School when she was 10 years old. (Kallan Lyons)

Makayla Sam-Greene, a Grade 12 student at the school, received the name Semiet at a ceremony when she was 10 years old. But it wasn't until she started high school that she recognized the importance of receiving a traditional name.

"It made me want to keep working hard as I did when I was 10 years old and look forward to the future and graduate and carry myself in a really good way," said Sam-Greene.

What's in a name?

Historically, naming ceremonies were central to the governance of Stó:lō society, according to Sonny McHalsie, a Stó:lō cultural leader and historian. Ancestral names were passed down from one generation to the next along with rights and privileges for resource gathering. They also conveyed one's status within the community.

"The rights and privileges would include where you could fish, where you could hunt, where you could gather berries, the stories you could tell, the songs you could sing, the carvings you could put on your house post," said McHalsie.

But, today, the centrality of traditional names to Stó:lō society is greatly diminished. An 1884 amendment to the Indian Act that made it illegal for Indigenous people to gather for ceremonies severely disrupted the social, cultural and economic life of the Stó:lō.

"The potlatch ban didn't allow us to have those ceremonies where we could pass things down," said McHalsie.

"So, we lost that connection to it."

The ban was lifted in 1951 but it wasn't until the 1970s and 1980s that the Stó:lō began to revive naming ceremonies.

A living tradition

Today, Stó:lō naming ceremonies take place in winter at a communal longhouse while others are held in community halls, at sacred sites, or even in backyards. The school follows many of the historical protocols of community ceremonies: Guests are invited, witnesses are called, blankets or cedar are spread on the floor, and a meal is shared, among others.

Students and community members formed a drum circle and played an honour song to close the ceremony. (Ryan Patrick Jones)

But the school's ceremony departs in some ways from tradition. For one thing, the school is responsible for organizing the ceremony, instead of the family of the person receiving the name.

"To a certain degree it kind of interferes with the families' way of doing it," said McHalsie.

"With [community] naming ceremonies people plan for them years and years ahead. And I think with the school it's kind of rushed."

Another difference is that students who do not receive an ancestral name are given a new Halqeméylem name based on certain qualities that define them.

"I think all names should be ancestral," McHalsie said.

"Because when you look into it that's when you find your culture and history. That's when you find out who your ancestors are and who your relatives are."

From the school's point of view, they are giving students an opportunity to participate in a traditional practice that anchors them in their culture.

Local Community News

"We know that our students, they use the names," said Kay.

"A lot of them have identity. They have place. They have being. They know that this place, Seabird Island, is a part of their home."

Ultimately, McHalsie recognizes the importance of the ceremony to the students and believes that it contributes to the broader revival of Stó:lō culture.

"I think it's good for revival," said McHalsie.

"It's just allowing the young people to know that there is a naming ceremony."

For Bobb-Jollimore, he takes great pride in taking on his uncle's name.

"I'd say he'd like me to carry that name on and keep it going."

Mission wins Halq'emeylem event

23 teams showed their language skills in the Upriver dialect of the Halq'eméylem language

• May. 14, 2018 8:30 a.m.

The Mission school district and Hatzic Middle School recently took home the championship title at the Halq'emeylem language contest held at Seabird Island on April 26.

The event saw 23 teams attempting to show off their language skills and learn even more words in the Upriver dialect of the Halq'eméylem language.

For many, it was more than a simple competition as the Halq'eméylem Translation Contest does important work for a language that is integral to the culture and identity of Coast Salish people across the Valley.

In the end, it was Mission that took home the title.

"I am so unbelievably proud of this group – their dedication to learning the language, and then braving the competition and not only participating, but walking away as champions," said Rachelle Silver, the teacher who taught the language to the Mission students.

"Our group competed against 131 competitors. Some of these schools are infused with the Halq'emeylem language and have the opportunity to learn the language every day right from the beginning stages of schooling."

She said the victory was huge considering they beat some schools who have been learning Halqeméylem since day one.

"We were all glowing when we heard the Mission name announced."

The language itself is in danger of disappearing. There are only five known fluent speakers of the Upriver Halq'eméylem dialect left and all are over 70 years old.

"I tell people, 'Our language is suffocating and we're here to give breath to [it],' "said Dianna Kay, Seabird Island language development/ Halq'eméylem instructor.

"There are so few speakers and we don't use it very much. But if they understand the language, they can understand the land."

Seabird College Congratulates its Health Care Assistant Class!

Seabird College would like to congratulate all twelve of the students who recently completed all of the requirements of the Health Care Assistant Program at Seabird College! Seabird College partnered with Nicola Valley Institute of Technology to offer this 8 month program, which included three clinical work experiences including Home Support, Complex Care 1 and Complex Care 2 (dementia care).

Seabird College has a fantastic team of instructors and mentors that offered guidance and support for our students. Sue Falconer, Heather McDonald were in-class instructors, Shannon Williams an on the job mentor, as well as our former Licensed Practical Nursing (LPN) students who visited the class to provide advice. Many of our current Health Care Assistant students are already interviewing for full time jobs, while others are preparing for the long road of continuing their studies to become Licensed Practical Nurses. Seabird College is preparing to offer a Licensed Practical Nursing program, which is currently full and has a waitlist of students interested in signing up! Seabird College strives to provide current and in-demand skills for employment ready programs. We want to see all of our students succeed, and become employed in a job or career that they love. If you are ready to take the next step in going back to school, drop by our office any time, check out our Seabird College Facebook page, call 604-796-6839 or email: schapman@seabirdisland.ca we hope to meet you soon! Classes tentatively start in June, July, August and September 2018.

AMBULANCE BILLS

Classifieds

Please submit ambulance bills as soon as you receive them. If the bill is more than 1 year old, ambulance costs will no longer be covered under the Non-Insured Health Benefits (NIHB). Anyone with a status number can have the ambulance paid for by Health Canada as long as it's not an ICBC claim.

We can only provide assistance to those with a status number.

Unfortunately, ambulance bills will not be covered if you were also incarcerated in jail. Ambulance Billing will know if you were incarcerated based on the bill's address. Please do not bring these in as they will be denied and it will be the client's responsibility to pay.

Please note, if you were taken home in an ambulance after a stay in the hospital, this will not be covered and it will be the client's responsibility to pay.

Contact Maggie Pettis 604-796-2177.

MEDICAL CARDS

Need to apply for a new medical card because it was lost or stolen? We can assist you when applying for a new one.

Each client is responsible for paying for their medical cards. If they've been lost or stolen more than two times the cost is $20 for each new card.

Please note, we do not assist with BC ID applications.
